ISMS is not an official coordinating body and cannot speak to policy or national commitments. It seeks mutual improvement through collaboration. Thanks to the staff of the Osside Institute for leading this initiative.

Tentative Agenda

- 1. Introductions of those present
- 2. Confirm and prioritize the agenda
- 3. Membership and timing of regular business meetings for senior enlisted leadership all ISMS members and participating organizations, plus BDC-CSEL, NATO DEEP Centres, NL, and others interested. Virtual or in person? Margins of other meetings?
- 4. Curriculum exchanges curriculum consists of context (when and to whom), content (what is taught), and pedagogy (how it is taught). Rank or stage of career is probably the benchmark for context. What are the modalities for an exchange?
- 5. Guest lecturers. Are there people available on Zoom to address specialized topics of broad professional interest?
- 6. Coaching and psychometric tools to develop leaders. This is a subject for research cooperation and discussion in the Working Group on Military Education.
- 7. Repository for podcasts and AV materials for shared use. What is the best way to store and access them?
- 8. Three-year plan. For budget purposes, can we share our institutional objectives and coordinate travel plans and meeting venues, for example, using the margins of the DEEP Clearing House or meetings at the DEEP NCO schools? ISMS then becomes the research follow-up to these meetings.

Some additional subjects for discussion that have arisen in other conversations might be included.

- Can we arrange special journal issues on senior enlisted leader education by talking to the editors' business group? (call for papers)
- Can we solicit interest in enlisted leader education within the working group?
- Can we encourage more international exchanges of staff or curriculum through direct contact between schools?
- Can we set up regular virtual meetings to explore solutions to common problems?
